Sellers Beware

Tanya Memme hosts second season of Sell This House

Sell This House has been described as a cross between This Old House and Candid Camera. Mini cameras are concealed inside a home that's been on the market for quite some time, and the audience is privy to all the impolite and downright nasty comments being made by prospective buyers. Those viewpoints are considered when the show staff approach the owners about how to re-stage the home to get it sold.

"My job is to give the owners encouragement," says host Tanya Memme. "I'm there to try to help turn negatives into positives. And then I make suggestions for how to re-stage without spending too much money. We usually stick around the $300 area."

During the successful first season of the show about 90 percent of homes sold within a few weeks, but things can get pretty dicey during those hidden-camera walkthroughs.

"One home had a bedroom that was painted red, and one member of this couple commented, 'Oh my God, this reminds me of the gates of Hell,'" Memme recalls. "It can get pretty graphic. But luckily, we usually wind up with a happy ending." Sell This House premieres Dec. 7 at 5 p.m. ET on A&E (G5, 23; DISH 118)
